Stock prices have come under severe selling pressure only a few companies currently sustaining the trend made last year. The trend

As the calls of 'Weychi ne nikarvu?' (Sell and exit?) mounted last week, I wrote these lines for personal clarity. ● If the market can be expressed through the prism of emotion, then permit me to say that we encountered a near-terminal emotion last Friday — panic.

● The foundation of a robust bull market is hopelessness. When you know that nothing can go right might be the time to buy. ● Markets don't just react; they over-react (which creates the opportunity). ● A bull market usually contains junctures when you are convinced about the value in your shoulder, only to say "we lost all our gains in 12 days". ● Attention will gradually turn from "how much will the stock go up by?" to "how much likely to earn?"

● The champion compares bar- rading from stock to stock sector dumping. ● In the depths of winter lie the seed for a roaring summer. ● The champion is one who works over-time appraising value when stocks have flattened out. ● The champion compares bar- rading from stock to stock sector
